Transit Commissioners in this matter, we can only endeavor, by amending the law, to prevent the consummation of a similar contract for the extension of the tunnel railway to other boroughs. Mr. Albert L. Johnson, a responsible contractor, has offered to build these extensions upon the city's terms, but is willing to stipulate that three cents shall be the maximum fare for the longest ride upon the railroad. A study of the statistics of street railroads in other cities indicates that even where the cost to capital of building and maintaining a railroad is much greater than it would be under the Rapid Transit law, there is a substantial profit in three-cent fares. The benefit to the people of the outlying sections of the city of this reduction in lare is so obvious as to need no argument. I regret that it seems now too late. Gen.
